The death of Albino Luciani was announced by Father Romeo Panciro-li, the Vatican's press spokesman, at 7:42 this morning. The pope, who had been patriarch of Venice, was elected by the College of Cardinals to the papacy on Aug. 26.
The Varican statement said: "This morning 29th of September, 1978, around 5:30 a.m., the private secretary of the pope, Father John Magee, entered the room of Pope John Paul I. Having failed to find him in the chapel as usual, [Father Magee] looked for him in his room and found him dead in bed, with the light burning, like a person reading."

"The doctor, who arrived immediately, certified that the unexpected death occurred at 11 p.m. on Sept. 28 due to myocardiac arrest."

Cardinal Villot will summon the conclave of cardinals that will elect a new pope. The conclave will begin 15 to 20 days from now, under the rules set down by Pope Panl. The news of the pontiff's death came as a shock to church officials and Catholic lay believers.

At 65, Cardinal Luciani was one of the younger members of the College of Cardinals when he was elected. He was forceful and active and known to be in good health. His ready smile and unceremonious personal style further contributed to an impression of youthfulness that contrasted sharply with the increasingly frail and fatigued appearance of his prede-

'Smiling Pope' Brought Passion for Simplicity and Humility to Vatican

ROME, Scot. 29 (NYT) - To an era of transitioo in his church, when ancient structures and trappings of ecclesiastical power appeared increasingly meaningless to many believers, Pope John Paul I brought a passion for simplicity, vast pastoral experience, a knack for communicating with the chur-chgoing people, and cheerful, engaging character traits.

The "smiling pope," who radiated optimism and a moral certainty grounded in traditional values, was in striking contrast to the seeming-ly anguished personality of the pontiff whom he had succeeded,

Pope Paul VI.
The day after Pope John Paul was elected to the papacy, he made an attempt at self-evaluation in a brief address from the belcony of St. Peter's Basilica. Spurning the traditional pontifical "we," he traditional pontifical "we," he spoke about himself in the first person singular, as he would do on all but the most formal occasions aft-

"I have neither the wisdom of the heart of Pope John nor the prepara-tion and culture of Pope Paul," he told the crowd gathered in St. Peter's Square to receive the new pontif's blessing. "But I am in their place, I must seek to serve the church. I hope you will help me with your prayers."

the last category."

The patriarch's letters to illustrious figures, first published in a Padua monthly magazine, Messenger of St. Anthooy, were collected in a volume, "Most Illustrious Ones," in 1976. When the letter writer became pope, the book was translated into several languages. The letters to the "most illustrious ones," and many newspaper articles by the future pope were characterized by a vivid, witty style replete with anecdote and telling detail. "If I weren't a bishop, I would be a journalist," he said.

Already in high school in Feltre and Bellimo in the Dolomite Alps of northeastern Italy, he was an omnivorous reader. Shortly after his election to the papacy, his younger brother, Eduardo, was asked whether the new pontiff had ever been mountaineering. "Yeah, he would take walks," Eduardo Lucianí, a retired schoolteacher saíd, "Bot his hobby, isn't moun-tains. It is books."

In spite of drive and his appearance of robust health, Pope John Paul had struggled with illness weapons to China and development of a continued exchange of military personnel and even a train-

This week, Defense Minister Nikola Ljubicic led a senior military delegation on a six-day visit to the United States, where the Yugoslavs met Secretary of Defense Harold Brown and toured military installations in Virginia and Colarado.

Yugoslav officials, especially mil-itary planners, have apparently been worried for some time about a menacing military buildup among the Warsaw Pact forces that face them across the Bulgarian and Hungarian frontiers. Those forces are believed to be Yugoslavia's principal threat in the future.

As a result, the country's politi-cal leaders have begun to move more quickly, while the stabilizing influence of Marshal Tito is still present, to build counterbalancing political and military ties with other world powers, particularly the United States and China. Such ties, the Yugoslav leadership believes, would be the country's best protection against a Soviet threat when Marshal Tito is no longer around.

Seminary of Belluno for almost two decades, first as a student and then as a professor. He taught theology, canon law, sacred art and other subjects.

Postgraduate Studies

He was ordained to the priest-hood in Belluno on June 7, 1935. In the following autumn, he was sent to Rome for postgraduate studies at the Pontifical Gregorian Univer-sity, the Jesuit institution that has been the alma mater of 16 popes and eight canonized saints.

Exceptionally, the young priest was permitted to work for a doctorate as an absentee student while being engaged in parish and diocesan affairs at home. By the time the Rev. Luciani earned his doctorate in theology from the Gre-gorian University, he was already teaching at the Belluno seminary. He remained on its faculty for 10

During that time he spent two stretches in a sanitarium for treatment of tuberculosis. He was eventually cured, but his health remained delicate.

In 1957, Father Luciani met the then patriarch of Venice, Cardinal Angelo Giuseppe Roncalli, who used to spend vacations in a rest house for the clergy near Belluno. The prelate must have been impressed by the smiling popularizer of orthodoxy. A year later, the pa-triarch had become Pope John XXIII, and when be needed a new bishop for Vittorio Veneto, he chose Father Luciani. The new bishop was consecrated by the pope on Dec. 15, 1958.

During his years in Vittorio Veneto, Bishop Luciani opposed proselytizing by evangelical missionaries who tried to canvass his diocese. In seminary the bishop had learned, and later taught, the doctrine that "error has no rights," and that only the Roman Catholic Church was the depository of truth.

He was to soften his attitude toward other faiths at the Second Vatican Council. Between 1962 and 1965, he spent long periods in Rome to take part in the international church assembly convened by Pope John. It proved to be a turning point in Bishop Luciani's intellectual and religious life. He cagerly seized the chance of meeting colleagues from other countries. He often attended the discussions sponsored privately by German, Dutch and other theologihad been particularly difficult for him to accept the principle of religious liberty. But he eventually wholeheartedly endorsed the decla-ration of Vatican II that is known as "Dignitatis Humanae [Of Human Dignity]." It said that "the human person has a right to religious freedom," and to free inquiry in the search for truth.

Pope Paul VI had been following the work of the bishop in the northeastern corner of Italy, and in 1969 transferred him to the prestigious see of Venice. For centuries the archbishop of St. Mark's cathedral had borne the honorifie title of a patriarch. Patriarch Luciani could be reasonably sure that he would also become a cardinal.

He disappointed the Venetians by refusing to make his official entry into the city in the traditional manner — in a procession of gon-dolas along the Grand Canal to St. Mark's Square.

The mayor of Venice, Mario Rigo, a Socialist, said after the patriarch's election to the papacy:
"He has lived among us for eight years with a simplicity that was ofen disconcerting.

Unexpectedly Stern

The patriarch could be unexpectedly stern when church discipline was questioned. He curbed religious grassroots groups in the indus-trial districts of Mestre and Porto Marghera west of Venice, and for-hade mambers of his clergy to take factory jobs as worker-priests.

In the controversy over the pill, he advised Pope Paul in a confidential memo against an outright con-demnation of "artifical birth control." But when Pope Paul issued his ban on the pill, Patriarch Luciani stood by him.

In September, 1972, Pope Paul paid a visit to Venice. In froot of hundreds of onlookers he put his red stole around the shoulders of the patriarch. A few months later, on March 5, 1973, the pontiff made him a cardinal.

When Cardinal Luciani was pope, churchmen who knew of Pope Paul's unusual gesture in 1972 cited it as evidence that the pontiff had deemed the patriarch of Venice worthy of becoming his successor.

One of the prelates who participated in the 1978 cooclave, Cardinal Gabriel-Marie Garrone, wrote in the Vatican newspaper L'Osservatore Romano that Pope Paul had been the principal elector of the new pontiff, inspiring the cardinals, from beyond death, to choose "the

The council represents 293 non-Roman Catholic churches in about 100 countries.

Archbishop Tomas O'Fiaieh, leader of Ireland's 3.5 million Roman Catholics, said: "I think Pope John Paul, if be had lived even a few short years, might have been destined to be one of the great popes of this century."

Cardinal Terence Cooke of New

Tass reported the death in a oneparagraph dispatch from Rome, mentioning the election of the pope on Aug. 26. French traditionalist priests said that the death was a sign from God that John Paul I was oot meant to head the Roman Catholie church.

"The agents of Satan in flesh and

The only area in which the administration failed to get what it had sought was in U.S. contributions to the World Bank and other multilateral aid institutions. AMSTERDAM, Sept. 29 — The Dutch national airline KLM is cutting its air fares by between 15 and These go into effect on Sunday, 25 percent on routes to West Germany, Britain and Italy starting Nov. 1, the company said today.

The KLM reductions follow cuts in fares recently announced by British Airways of up to 40 percent on 18 routes to West Germany, France Belgium, Holland and Fin-fare between Amsterdam and Rome will drop from 688 guilders ($320) to 590 guilders ($274).

British Fare Assault The carlier British Airways announcement of reduced fares represented a successful assault on the fare structure of the International Air Transport Association, which has made European flights among the most costly in the world for dis-tances traveled.

A British Airways spokesman said the reductions were agreed on at the just-concluded IATA meet-ing in Vienna. Still more national airlines were expected to follow with similar rate cuts.

British Airways needs formal approval for the changes from Brit-ain's Civil Aviation Authority, but this is believed to be assured. Its new fares apply only to round trips.

Under the new British Airways schedule, the price of a London-Cologne-London ticket will then drop to about $86 from the current $123, about $8 less than the standard rail journey, which takes 10 hours. It is also the least expensive scheduled fare between London and any continental destination, British Airways said.

John Paul I's Tragic Drama

He entered the papacy by the sudden, un-expected choice of the "instant conclave." He left it after little more than a month by the sudden, unexpected blow of a cardiac attack. A man who had never cultivated drama saw his last days surrounded by it; a world that looked to him for leadership of the spirit saw their hopes bloom in the warmth and humanity of his first days as Pope John Paul I — and now sees those hopes wilt around his coffin.

Albino Luciano had risen high in the Roman Catholic Church before Pope Paul VI died - he went to the conclave of the cardinals as Patriarch of Venice, but in the speculation that surrounded that meeting, his name was hardly ever mentioned as the new bisbop of Rome. The swift decision in his favor, at a time when it was known that the new pope would bear heavy burdens in a divided church and a chaotic world, was as surprising in its speed as in the fact that a relative unknown was chosen.

In terms of church policy, Pope John Paul or even to indicate in what direction he would like to see Catholicism move. Rather, he seemed to be seeking to create a broad platform on which not only all Catholics, but all peoples and faiths might try to shape the cultures and disciplines of these swift-changing times. For not only did Catholics of many viewpoints rally to their new leader, but other Christians, Jews and persons of diverse religious tenets were moved by John Paul's transparent belief in man's ability to rise above man's inherent evils.

This contribution, so painfully brief, may not bring too much that is concrete to future councils of mankind, whether in the Vatican or in the capitals of the world. But there is good reason to believe that the spirit of John Paul's acts and words as pope will prove a useful and inspiring legacy to his successor and to those who act in the name of churches or of nations. John Paul's tenure as pope was brief; Albino Luciano lived a much longer life. And in both aspects, he gave to mankind a glimpse of what good choices could mean had all too little time to introduce changes, in material content and spiritual rewards.

The Knesset's Vote

Menachem Begin's success in gaining the Israeli Parliament's approval of the Camp David package represented awesome leadership. By subordinating some of his own most fundamental convictions and splitting his political base in the process, he made plain that be is dead serious about peace. He could not have demonstrated more effectivly that Anwar Sadat, in initiating the process of peace with Israel, took risks wisely and well.

Recall that immediately after the summit Mr. Begin said he would not enforce party discipline or otherwise bring his personal influence to bear on the Knesset vote on the requirement, agreed on at Camp David, that Israel dismantle its post-1967 Sinai settlements before Egypt would sit down to write a peace treaty. His seeming diffidence puzzled many people, in Washington as in Isra-· el: How could be fail to do what was necessary to support his own agreement, one promising Israel nothing less than its first taste of peace?

The answer, we think, lies in the fact that Zionism, in the form most universally held and deeply felt among secular Israelis as well as religious ones, means settling, pioneering, sacrificing, redeeming the Jewish homeland by building a new life. It is precisely that passion that has led many Arabs to believe over the years that the essence of Zionism is expansionism: Never had a Jewish settlement been voluntarily removed. Mr. Begin is in this sense as passionate a Zionist as anyone in his country. Evidently, he could not easily bring himself to swallow his passion, to support dismantling the settlements in Sinai, and to take the political heat - especially the heat coming with special intensity from his oldest friends and closest political allies.

When Mr. Begin found he actually could not count on a majority within his own Likud bloc, however, he switched course. He accepted the fact that repudiation by his own supporters would undercut both his prestige and his diplomacy, and he threw himself into battle, finally warning that he would resign if Likud did not back him. He had to counter a good deal more than charges of "anti-Zionism" on the settlements issue. He had also to meet pervasive fears that in the "framework" affecting Egypt he had gravely jeopardized Israel's security and in the framework affecting the West Bank he had virtually invited establishment of a hostile Palestinian state.

In the end, after 17 unbroken hours of debate, the prime minister won as expected. The 84-to-19 vote was agonizing even for those who supported the government, and it provided a true test of the relative value that Israelis place on settlements and peace. But Mr. Begin split the Likud, which went with him only by 28 to 19. In the Herut party within Likud — Mr. Begin himself founded Herut — only 11 of 24 members supported

The Knesset debate should lead promptly, as Jimmy Carter said Thursday, to an Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty. That is the point of the exercise. The debate should also led to a tempering of the impatience still widely felt toward Menachem Begin, by an appreciation of the ruggedness of the political terrain he must traverse on the way to peace. Mr. Carter set a certain example Thursday, abandoning the combative tone in which he had earlier discussed his differences with Mr. Begin over future West Bank settlements and granting that those differences involved misunderstandings that can be calmly resolved.

We have had our own anxieties about Mr. Begin, but if his performance in the Knesset debate is typical of his approach from here on in, those anxieties will be a thing of the

The Labs and the Test Ban

When the definitive history of Soviet-U.S. efforts to negotiate an end to nuclear testing comes to be written, it will be 1) very long and 2) replete with incidents of brass-knuckle bureaucratic warfare.

The current episode involves a campaign to get Jimmy Carter to weaken the comprehensive test ban that he is negotiating with the Russians (and British) at Geneva. The campaign is led by two nuclear weapons labs - Los Alamos and Livermore - and their sympathizers in the departments of Defense and Energy. They are moving, it seems, on two fronts.

First, the labs contend that a treaty should let the United States conduct occasional underground tests to check the quality of stockpiled warheads. However, a group of former top Los Alamos hands has told the president that the necessary stockpile assurances can be gained by measures other than nuclear testing - by nonnuclear testing, inspection and remanufacture of suspect units. Our own view is that whatever marginal confidence, if any, might come from testing is not worth the cost in strategic and political instability. President Carter, we understand, feels that

The labs further argue that if a comprehensive test ban is completed, it should run for only three years, with the presumption that testing should then be renewed. Mr. Carter is apparently under pressure to throw the testing lobby that bone. We hope he resists. A short ban would undercut his notest pledge. A short ban accompanied by the expectation of resumed testing would mock everything be has ever said about the nuclear menace. With China, for one, still not recruited to the Geneva talks, it makes some sense not to write an indefinite ban. But a ban must be of respectable length. Five years is minimal

A comprehensive test ban seems at once so familiar, for having been discussed for two decades, and so modest, when set against the strategic arms limitation talks, that people's attention wanders. It may help to underline a few basic things. To continue testing warheads underground is at this point merely to drive the arms race mindlessly on. A test ban would freeze what almost everyone regards as the current U.S. advantage in warhead technology. A ban would strengthen the two powers' hand in inducing other countries not to start or expand nuclear arsenals. The treaty under negotiation embodies long-sought Soviet decisions to permit on-site inspections and to forego "peaceful" explosions.

For political reasons, a test ban may have to stand in line behind a SALT treaty, but, meanwhile, anxious would-be testers are trying to beat down the U.S. negotiating position. It must not happen.

How Can U.S. Guarantee Mideast Pact?

By James Reston

WASHINGTON — In his Thursday press conference, President Carter expressed confi-dence that Israel and Egypt would sign a peace agreement, but he didn't say what he would do to guarantee it if they did.

For many years, the United States has thought vaguely of underwriting any "general settlement" in the Middle East, and the peace process has now gone far enough to make the question of a U.S. "guarantee" at least a relevant subject for debate.

This raises all kinds of questions. What kind of "guarantee"? Of the territorial borders that may be agreed upon by Israel and Egypt? Would it be done by treaty, confirmed by the state of firmed by the Senate of the United States, by executive agreement, or how? Would such a commitment by the United States cover both Egypt and Israel or only Israel?

Many Questions

There are many other questions that need to be explored. For exam-ple, Prime Minister Begin of Israel has repeatedly said that Israel was opposed to any arrangement in-volving U.S. troops on its soil, and President Carter has made clear that he is not thinking along these lines either.

Yet, Prime Minister Begin, when he was in Washington this month, did talk to a few reporters about making naval facilities available to the United States at the port of Haifa, and air bases available else-where — in the event of a general threat to the peace.

This last point is important. He seemed to be saying that Israel would take care of its own security, but if there were imminent dangers of a general war threatening the security of the free nations, Israel military facilities would be open to the naval and air forces of the Unit-

Strong Support

An executive agreement for the use of Israeli bases under the threat of general war would undoubtedly have strong support in the Congress, though this would probably involve large appropriations by the Congress to make the bases adequate for the most modern U.S. thirs and planes.

ships and planes.

It is the hope of leading officials in Washington that the signing of an Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty will not merely be the end of hostility between the state of the ity between these two states, bot the beginning of cooperation for the peaceful development of the en-tire Middle East.

With more than a million Pales-tinian Arabs eventually enjoying self-administration on the West Bank and Gaza under the Camp David agreements, Israel is con-frooted with an immense task of building a nation of diverse ele-ments. Will these Palestinians gradually become part of a diverse hut unified Israeli state, or become a disruptive element threatening the security of Israel from within? This is a question that deeply troubles officials here and in Jerusalem.

Much will depend on U.S. help, oot only to assist in the military se-curity of the area, but the ecocomic

There are many troubling subsidiary issues. Across the wide sweep of the Middle East from the Iodian Ocean to the Mediterranean, there are signs of growing tension be-tween the modern and conservative elements in Pakistan, Iran, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Turkey and even in Israel itself.

Consequences

No U.S. military guarantees are likely to avoid the consequences of this militant reaction against the first serious effort to modernize the Middle East, but the time has come for a reappraisal of U.S. policy there under the changed cooditions of an Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty.

Indeed, largely because of his unattractive qualities, Mr. Begin has been far more forthcoming in oegotiation than any other Israeli leader could have been. If he nearly always says the wrong thing, he nearly always does the right thing. The indictment of Begin as an in-

· The first step came last year on Sept. 17, when Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan met in Morocco with Hassan Tuhami, an Egyptian diplomat, to arrange a possible visit to Israel by Sadat.  A second step took place on The United States came off its previous insistence that a place for the Palestine Liberatioo Organization be made at the peace table.  A third step took place at the Ismailia summit meeting with Sa-dat last December. To engage the Egyptians further Begin abandoned the previous insistence of all past Israeli leaders that there had to be a splitting of West Bank territory between Israel and the Arabs.

Carter Rides Wave to Cut Spending the Democratic Party" that is at stake, he said.

It was a theme that obviously had been on the president's mind. The two presidents took note of the charter's stipulation that no member nation may intervene in the internal affairs of another, but asserted that this provision does implication in the attempted mur-der of a Yugoslav consular official in Duesseldorf in 1976.

If convicted, Bilandzic will serve his sentence — as he did on a previous conviction for terrorist activity — in a West German, not Yugo-slav, jail. A resident of West Ger-many for 20 years, Bilandzic is the leader of a small Croatian separatist group that seeks to free the semiautonomous constituent republic of Croatia from Yugoslavia.

The arrest of the four West Germans, according to some sources here, was viewed by Yugoslavia as a rare and major opportunity to get their hands on wanted Croatian terrorists. Their hopes oo doubt were fueled when the West German lances, executing women and chil-dren, and "recruiting and using for-eign mercenaries in pursuing its genocide against the Nicaragnan mans rounded up the eight emigres, who had been at liberty, only after the Yugoslavs picked up the wanted West Germans.

Although it maintains good relations with West Germany, Yugoslavia feels that that country, along with the United States, has shown excessive leniency in dealing with terrorist activity directed against Yugoslav officials and facilities sembly Wednesday by his country's outside Yogoslavia.

This results in refusal of many foreign minister and his own supe-Yugoslav extradition demands, Mr. Quintana's speech de-nounced the rebels in Nicaragua as since the aim of extradition is to return, a suspect to the country in "terrorists," and said that they had seized nearly 3,000 hostages in dewhich he committed a crime. Thus West Germany has refused to extradite Bilandzic and the others, on the ground that all the crimes they manding freedom for "so-called poallegedly committed took place in West Germany.

West Germany's action has sparked a bitter Yugoslav propa-ganda campaign against Bonn that has assumed added virulence now ing such slogans as "Down With that the summer holiday season is over and West German tourists are oo longer flocking to Yugoslav resorts with coveted Deutsche marks. The Yugoslavs accuse Bonn of

The West Germans insist that the issue is a matter of legality, notpolitics. Ostensibly, the quarrel is over interpretation of the 1970 West German-Yugoslav extradition treaty, which rules out extradition of suspects wanted for "political" crime in their home countries. The treaty also prohibits a prisoner. swap, a ban that the Yugoslavs seek to circumvent by claiming their demands for the eight emigres represents a "parallel" develop-ment to the West Germans de-

Lobbying for 'Legitimate Defense'

Right to Slay Burglars

By Jane M. Friedman

chilly summer night in Florange, in town. Mr. Leroy, obsessed as always by the possibility of armed robbery, barncaded the door and strengthened it with chairs.

Later, strange sounds came from downstairs. Afraid to go down and look, Mr. Leroy shot blindly through the second-floor window. He killed Hocine Sakhi, 13.

Mr. Leroy, who is at liberty awaiting trial for the Aug. 24 shooling, is no isolated case in France. Since the beginning of the year, home owners and merchants have attacked 20 robbers, killing 10 of them, in what could be the start of a citizens' revolt against crime and the lack of police protection. In each case, townspeople supported the recourse to armed defense.

Men like Mr. Leroy and his local supporters are swelling the ranks of a new French organization named Legitime Defense. It, too, is reacting against an increase in crime.

According to the organization, there are 500 burglaries a day in France. The number of armed robberies and other crimes has doubled in 10 years. The organization, which was formed in January, contends that people have the right to shoot and kill trespassers without warning, even if the trespasser is unarmed

Legitime Defense, which now boasts 25,000 members, has become the focus of a controversy over "legitimate" self-defense and how far an individual can go in taking the law into his own hands.

The French penal code permits homicide or assault in self-defense when the occupant is trying to re-pulse a thicf entering his home at night, or if he is defending himself against violent burglary.

In recent years, judges have applied a concept of "proportion" in court decisions. The individual may employ methods that are deeme proportionate to the attack against him. He theoretically cannot use arms if there is no threat to his life or person.

Criminals are well treated in this country," said Francois Romeirio, 70, a retired judge who is the president of Legitime Defense.

His apartment door is reinforced with metal, and he keeps a revolver nearby.

"Victims in this country get only the right to suffer," he said in an

Self-defense became an issue here two years ago with the case of Lionel Legras, a garage mechanic near Troyes. His weekend home had been burglarized 12 times. To avert the 13th, he booby-trapped a transistor radio and locked it in a wardrobe. Outside his home, he hung signs saying "No Trespassing.

Danger of Death."
While Legras was away, two burglars entered the house and opened the armoire, detonating the bomb.
One burglar died in the explosion. The other, Andre Rousseau, lost an eye and pressed charges. Legras was convicted of manslaughter this year, but the aid of lawyers like Mr. Romeirio and Henri-Rene Garand helped get him a suspended sen-

Soon after the trial, Mr. Romeirio and Mr. Garaud set up Legitime Defense to provide legal aid to citizens accused of killing intruders.

In August last year, Daniel Gaillard, owner of an electrical appli-ance store, killed a burglar near his house in southeastern France. Last

Armed Frenchmen Claim

PARIS, Sept. 29 (IHT) — On a Aug. 30, Marcel Hucleux, a chem-hilly summer night in Florange, in ist, shot a 23-year-old burglar in northeastern France, Raymond front of his home in suburban Par-Leroy, his wife and her mother re-tired to a small apartment over glars found unexpected death at the their pastry shop in the center of hands of armed French citizens.

The growing incidence of vigilan tism has alarmed the government. Justice Minister Alain Peyrelitte reminded the public recently that "le-gitimate defense" is strictly defined

The liberal press has accused the vigilantes of a "Wild West" mentality, and liberal lawyers have condemned the movement. "If we broaden the notion of legitimate defense," lawyer Jean-Louis Pel-letier said in Lui Magazine, "we'll eventually have private justice and militias which replace the legal forces. It will be anarchy."

Legitime Defense is not impressed. "If we don't do something about crime," Legras said in a telephone interview, "it's going to be catastrophic." His appeal for a retrial by jury will be heard next month. He says, "110 percent of the people are with me."

partiamentary assembly of the Council of Europe, after a heated debate in which feminists decried the oo-vote status of women, Socialists attacked its benign tax laws and some members fretted about having to accept "microstates."

Lohbyists for the hilly principality argued that Switzerland was admitted to the council at a time when its women did not have the right to vote. Critics replied that when Switzerland was brought in, it was evolving toward universal suffrage and there are no such moves afoot in Liechtenstein. It would take a referendum, in which only men could vote, to change the constitution.

The council, which has its headquarters here, was fnunded after World War II as a guardian of democracy and human rights.

"If we let Liechtenstein join, we may face similar demands from nther microstates like Monaco, the Faroe Islands, Guernsey, San Marino and all sorts of others," said British Laborite John Roper.

French Antiques Show Achieves Spendor Without Vulgarity

By Souren Melikian

PARIS, Sept. 29 (IHT) — The ninth Biennale of Antique Dealers, which opened its doors at the Grand Palais on Sept. 21 and will be close Oct. 8, is likely to be remembered as the finest antiques fair ever held in Paris or elsewhere. It is a brilliant show of traditional French interest of the paris of French interior decoration at its best—aiming at splendor without ever falling into vulgarity.

Compared with the drahness of the last such fairs at Grosvenor Bouse in London, the difference is House in London, the difference is drastic. Yet the most remarkable characteristic of this Biennale is not just its elegance. It rather lies in the massive return to the fashion of the fifties, when good taste meant the 17th and 18th centuries. In those days, no one dreamed of integrating primitive art from Africa, the Southern Seas or pre-Co-lumbian America into a traditional European setting: There is none to speak of at the Biennale. Simone de Monbrison, Helene Kamer, Jean Roudillon, none of the leading Par-is dealers in the field is present — to say nothing of their foreign colleagues.

Nor are there any medieval objets d'art — champleve enamels from Lunoges, iveries or bronzes - worth mentioning. The Middle East has been virtually eliminated. There is no Islamic art, with the exception of Turkish pottery from lznik which has always been ac-cepted into the European setting and comes, indeed, closer to West ern than to Eastern aesthetics with its broad designs and somewhat gaudy colors.

No Chinese Bronzes

More conspicuous still is the ab-sence of Indian and Far Easiern art of a high order. Gone is the magnificent Khmer sculpture of Cambodia, gone are the Chinese bronzes of a, gone are the Chinese months the 12th to 5th centuries BC or the the 12th to 5th centuries BC or the pottery of the great periods. None of the great Paris dealers came — Jean Michel Beurdeley is busy with his own private exhibition and Robert Rousset, whose collection may be depleted by his recent donation to the Musee Guimet, is about 100 as is Innier I on absent, too, as is Janine Loo.

As for the English galleries — Spink's, Spark's and Bluett's, which used to come to Paris — none could be bothered to make the trip.
Oriental art this year is reduced to the level of curios — Buddhist sculpture from Thailand striving to look like great art and failing abys-mally. Japanese export trinkers of the 19th century, etc.

Equally noticeable is the lack of arcbaeological objects. Egypt has vanished. There is not one good Greek vase, not a single Roman bronze, no carving from the ancient world, be it Western Asiatic or Mediterranean.

The economic explanation I heard concerning medieval objects and Egyptian art is unconvincing: The idea is that prices have soared so high that dealers either cannot hold them very long or are not willing to display them at the fair. But that reasoning sbould equally dispose of old masters — which are at least as expensive — as well as of high-quality 18th-century furniture.

Special Clientele

It seems more accurate to say that dealers in these respective fields now feel that their wares ap-peal to the kind of clientele that will not come to such a fair. Dealers in expensive Chinese pottery and bronzes sell to Japanese clients and to a few American museum cu-rators or high-powered collecturs who prefer to be contacted privately. Important medieval art now goes straight from the dealers' hands into museums. Middle East-ern art, particularly from Iran, terrifies private buyers and has never been truly accepted in interior dec-

In short, the art of the Middle Ages, of the Ancient World, and of the Middle East is noce again sepa-rated from the familiar home scene. The mood of the general public has changed and is now back where it stood a quarter of a century ago.

The large participation of English and continental dealers in Flemish and Dutch masters of the 16th and 17th centuries further stresses the emphasis on mannerism and classicism. Uncompromising 'Uncle Vladimir'

By John Walker

L ONDON, Sept. 29 (IHT) — David Mercer writes for tele-vision and film as well as stage, but the reserves his harshest work for the theater. His last stage play, the extraordinary "Duck Song" four years ago, left its middle-class char-acters literally stripped on all their possessions, and most of their illu-

But the despair in that work is as nothing compared to the loathing that flows through his new play, "Cousin Vladimir," at the Royal Shakespeare Company's Aldwych Theatre, which shows Mercer at his most uncompromising.

It is, to use a Shavian definition, a play unpleasant, partly because it concerns unpleasant people but also because it contains unpleasant truths. Some lines from "Hamlet" ("Speak no more: Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soul — and there I see much black and grained spots as will not leave their tinet") huzzed through my mind as I watched Mercer's characters about

Gathered onstage are the least appealing group one could wish to encounter: self-confessed "hard core" drinkers, alcoholics, opportunists, spongers and failures, all taking advantage of the vodka-sodden generosity of Austin (George Baker), a brilliant scientist who has inherited an unexpected fortune and has not been sober since.

Cold Interiors

The group staggers from pub to Austin's wailed garden where they drink away the afternoon until opening time, helping themselves from a bomely garden shed which disguises a gigantic booze-filled refrigerator. Their outward-bonho-mic likewise hides cold interiors from Henry (Geoffrey Chater), a pathetic parasitical ex-army officer, to Gordon (Julian Glover), a dubious bankrupt architect, described as "the backbone of the recession," and his twittering silly simple wife Smidge (Sheila Reed), and Glenda (Glen Walford), a failed actress, Annie (Gaye Brown), a sexually vo-racious failed singer, and Len (Michael Bertenshaw), a shabby private detective.

Austin himself suddenly disappears to Vienna to return with a

Austin insists to the appalled Katya that his cronies are not representative of England, that they are not a statistically significant sample, but Mercer proviles no glimpse of an alternative to heir vicious and self-nitring society, their cious and self-pitying society, their mean-spirited and affectionless waste of what freedom they have.

Despite the often brutal effectiveness of his questioning of liberal assumptions, Mercer devotes a disproportionate energy it establishing how nasty the group is, how quick it is to humiliate its members.
The dialogue crackles with a ferocious wit, but mostly given over to insult. The action of the play is too slight to carry the weight of the diatribes so that, like the characters, it periodically collapses.

Jane Howell's direction cooly emphasizes the degradation and the cast is convincingly vile, with a little burnan warmth being snipplied by Walter Brown's dull but honest security officer and Susan Engel's bewildered, unwanted Katya.

At the Hampstead Theatre, Michael Hasting's "Gloo Joo" is a chael Hasting's "Gloo Joo" is a pleasant play about unpleasant people, a comedy in which the author finds rogues and villains endearing. His protagonist, Meadowlark Warner, placed with great energy and charm by Oscar James, is an engaging layabout who finds himself plucked fron his bed and his sirlfriend by two immigraand his girlfriend by two immigra-tion officers intent on deporting

His confounding of a racist bu-reaucracy by uttering cutrageous claims and then, by force of per-sonality, making them come true, makes for mild amusement, the parting in one scene of genuine his nating in one scene of genuine hi-larity in which he is married by a liberal Jewish rabbi while the immi gration officials, wearing absurd woolly hats, act as reluctant witnesses and congregation.

Michael Rudman's direction keeps the play bubbling along and there is some excellent acting, nnt nnly from James as the genial trick-ster but from Antony Frown and Dave Hill as the two lidebound

There are two painters by the name of Jan Voss, which is uconvenient, but this one is the senior Voss, born in 1935 in Hamburg. The present show of his work ranges from 1961 to the present and reveals an artist with a witty narrative manner who, beginning with some aethetically very engaging paintings in the early 60s, then developed a free, comie and absurd imagery which, since the beginning of the '70s, he has been leading down more secretive ways. His most recent manner, while not un-related to his earlier work, a based on the scrawl much more than on

His work on paper (shown here from 1966 to 1978) seems to express innocence and good cheer, but reposes on a sensitive and intelligent understanding of coor relations and of composition. The reference to childhood should not give the mistaken impression that there is something naive and childlike in Humair's work, but his pleasure at work is infectious, and his use of two-dimensional, nonfigurative space is entirely original and perdadaist anti-patriotic insults or of Celine's vitriol without as much as a twinge. But Germany as a whole was trying to cope with the humiliation and futility of a war that ended in defeat. This is what gives the works of a Grosz or a Dix their intoller-able intensity and that of Schwitters its tenderness. In fact, there is no understanding German art of this century if one does not take current events into account.

More Intense

It can be argued that the same holds true of any country, despite the aesthetician's puristic efforts. hut the crisis was so much more in-tense in Germany, the clash of forces so much more violent, the chances of a successful revolution at one point so much stronger, that the humanist tradition of the German left was like a passenger on a roller coaster. There is little room for detachment in such circumstances and the political language of the left, which is rooted, the world over, in the German 19th century, applies precisely to what the exhibition sets before us.

Another contrast worth bearing in mind when it comes to comparing French and German culture is the meaning either one attched to rationality at the turn of the 18th

From Wire Dispatches
ZURICH, Sept. 29 — Directors of the Swiss National Bank

By Robert D. Hershey Jr. LONDON, Sept. 29 (NYT) -Gillette Continental, a West Ger-man subsidiary of the Boston-based toiletnes company, has a brand new reason for being — paper-shuffling, buying the output of some 18 overseas plants and then immediately reselling it.

In Switzerland, meanwhile, the Bank of America, the world's largest bank, has begun raising capital in a foreign currency for the first time, while in Britain, F. W. Woolworth has been forced to abandon the dollar and once again pay Japa-nese suppliers in sterling.

These are a few of the bost of ways in which U.S. multinational companies have responded to wild gyrations in foreign-currency markets these days, swings that pose a major threat to profits.

Rebilling Center

"General currency chaos is what prompted it," said John McCul-lagh, finance director of Gillette Enrope, in explaining wby his company earlier this year converted its West German operation to a so-called re-invoicing, or rebilling, center. "We've got a lot of cross-border supply of product." Gillette's move, similar to earlier units set up by such companies as Burroughs, Du Poot and Caterpil-lar Tractor, is being emulated by dozens of other multinationals.

The company now funnels the cy-exchange agreements. "Central banks have been swapping currencies for years; now we're doing it for commercial transactions," said John Price, manager of Continental Illinois bere. A parallel loan is one in which two parties simultaneously make loans of the same value to each other's foreign subsidiaries for 5 to 15 years. Back-to-backs are similar, except that money crosses national boundaries and thereby may raise tax problems.

The currency-exchange agreement, which Continental and Goldman, Sachs pioneered two years ago, consists of two foreign-ex-change contracts, one spot and one forward. Each company exchanges its currency for the other's, agreeing at the same time to swap the same amounts back in the future.

One of the companies pays the other a premium to compensate it for a loss of income because of differences in domestic interest rates. The bank may simply bring the two parties together or it may also become part of the transaction by assuming the risk of default.

Mr. Price estimates that more than $2 billion of such contracts

All three types of exchange fi-nancing may be used to minimize currency exposure, but they have other advantages as well. One is that they can overcome the extreme difficulty in finding in the open market forward contracts that last more than a year. Another is that they enable companies to avoid exchange control barriers.

Exchange financing, moreover, does not have to appear in the body

The Saudi definition of "reasonable," as previously voiced by its oil minister, Sheik Amed Zaki Yamani, is about 5 percent, or around 64 cents a barrel based on the $12.70 bench-mark price of OPEC oil.

According to a report from Oslo, Abdulhady Taher, who holds ministerial rank in the Saudi government as governor of Petromin, the state-owned oil company, said that "a 5-percent price increase in De-cember would be reasonable." Also, he said, "such a moderate price increase could be followed up later with more frequent increases in the range of some 2-to-3 percent the next few years."

At the seminar, Norway's petroleum and energy minister, Bjartmar Gjerde, this week supported such a move by OPEC. Norway is not an OPEC member, but it benefits from price increases because it is a growing producer and exporter of oil. The Norwegian official, however, asked his Arab guests to show moderation and avoid confrontation with consumer nations. In his Oslo remarks, Mr. Taher underscored the differences in views among the producers over the size of next year's price increase. But be said: "All the talk and spec-ulations here (in Oslo) about a major price increase in December are unrealistic because the world economy and the world market cannot absorb a too-high price increase."

Representatives of two of OPEC's pricing hawks, Iraq and Algeria, left little doubt, in comments to Norwegian reporters, that they will be pressing for a substan-tial price increase at the December meeting. Tayeh Abdul-Karim, Iraq's oil minister, would not say how much of an increase he might want. "I can only confirm there are differences in opinion," he said. Algeria's oil minister sold Norwegian reporters he expects a "price explosion" in oil for the 1980s, but be did not say what he expects the 1979 price to be

World's Aircraft Makers Poised for Profits Battle

By Paul Lewis

governments.
At stake are some $20-to-$30 bil-

ion worth of new passenger aircraft orders the world's airlines are expected to place during the remainder of this century, as well as West Europe's chances of maintaining a viable aircraft industry, and, perhaps, even the existence of some U.S. aircraft builders.

During the next 10 to 15 years, current estimates suggest the world's commercial airlines will be ordering around 1,000 mostly medum-range, wide-bodied jets, seating about 180 passengers. These thrifty, silent planes will replace the airlines' present fleets, which are becoming increasingly unsuited to an age of expensive fuel and popular reesistance to aircraft noise. Already, the fight to get this business promises to be as much a political as a commercial one. National governments are becoming deeply involved in preparations for the contest, while the manufacturing companies themselves are forging new alliances that are already changing the industry's shape.

U.S. Takeover

PARIS, Sept. 29 (NYT) — U.S. and West European aircraft manufacturers are now squaring off for a major battle that threatens to alter the face of their industry and set up new political strains between their Boeing, the world's biggest and most successful civil aircraft builder, plans to enter two runners: the 757, which will seat about 180 pas-sangers, and the slightly larger 767 with some 220 seats.

McDonnell Douglas wants to enter its Advanced Technology Medium Range Aircraft (ATMR), while Lockheed is thinking about a new 230-seater version of its existing reistar, known as the Tristar 400.

Engine Makers

Meanwhile, to power all these very similar and competing aircraft the Western world's three major aircraft engine makers — Britain's Rolls-Royce and in the United States, Pratt and Whitney and General Electric - are developing very similar engines that will be thrifty on fuel and very quiet.

Britain Joins in Airbus

BONN, Sept. 29 (AP-DJ) — The West German government confirmed today that an agreement had been reached for British participation in Airbus-Industric and welcomed the accord.

"What is really at stake here is whether America takes over the world's aircraft industry completely, or whether Europe can preserve and a promise not to order any an efficient industry of its own," more Boeing 757s beyond the 19 alsays. Gen. Jacques Mitterand, head readcy ordered by Britain.

AMERICAN CAESAR

Douglas MacArthur, 1880-1964 By William Manchester. Little, Brown. Illustrated. 793 pp. $15. Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

TT MAY be naive of us to expect a great general to be reasonable or democratic. If boxers, baseball and basketball stars have unmanageable egos, what are we to expect of an officer who holds in his hands, not a ball, but the lives of responsibility, you must have a terrible faith in yourself. You may even need to develop a kind of con-centration that eliminates all other

Douglas MacArthur's vanity and paranoia were the dirty laundry of his genius. He was painfully aware that no one clse was so well quali-fied to appreciate his exploits as he himself was. Because of his love of dramatic effects, he was nicknamed Sarah Bernhardt, but if war is not dramatic, what is?

Anyone who has ever been in the armed services knows that a uniform is a manifestation of showmanship, and MacArthur raised showmanship to the level of a tactical weapon. Bombs and bombast have a natural and time-honored affinity. It might be argued that most of MacArthur's "outrageous" behavior was of least partly dictated by military motives. Much has been made, for example, of his al-most suicidal disregard for person-al danger, but in "American Caesar," William Manchester suggests that, through such exposures, the general saturated himself with the feel of situations and cultivated his intuition.

Sophisticates were offended by MacArthur's old-fashioned rhetoric and by his sentimentality. Yet his sentimentality might be traced to the fact that he was a "true believer." And even sophisticates will admit that war, too, is old-fashioned. Like many complex person-like the many complex personalities, the general's was paradoxi-cal, and unlike most people's, his contradictions made headlines. While he was our most gifted and our most flamboyant man at war, MacArthur declared that war ought to be outlawed, and on his deathbed he begged President Johnson to stay out of Vietnam. For all his spectacular gains in World War II, often against superior forces, MacArthur's casualties were remarkably low.

Anachronistic in his personal outlook, he was ahead of his time in his military thinking. While his appetite for adulation was insatiable, his achievements almost justified that appetite. In his generalship of conflicting armies of opinion and his marshal-ing of the facts, William Manchester is something of a hero, too. His "American Caesar" is exquisitely ambivalent, not so much torn as amovatent, not so much torn as balanced between the two MacArthurs, whom he calls "noble and ignoble, arrogant and shy, the best of men and the worst of men, the most protean, most ridiculous, and most sublime. "His long, rich book is electric with this polarity.

Doneles MacArthur her not suf-

Douglas MacArthur has not sufferred from obscurity and the main lines of his life are generally known. Yet "American Caesar" is tense with the feeling that this is the authentic MacArthur, not the general of either myth or gossip. The book is splendid reading on several levels. Selecting his material, and especially his details, with the flair of a first-rate novelist, Manchester gives us a profound picture of the man MacArthur, of the two wars be fought in the Pacific, of the nature of war in that time, millions of men? To assume such a and of the American government's behavior under extreme pressure.

We see MacArthur being decorated nine times for heroism in World War I; liberalizing West Point when he was superintendent there; inexplicably getting caught with his air force on the ground and his rations out of reach after Pearl Harbor: escaping from Corregidor, in the most far-fetched Hollywood fashion, in a flimsy, limping PT boat under the noses of the Japanese fleet.

We see the general in Australia at the beginning of World War II being appointed "Commander in Chief of Nothing:" then gradually gathering force for his famous "leapfrogging" reconquest of the Pacific. Pacific.

"American Caesar" shows Mac-Arthur, as ruler of 83 million Japanese, introducing them to women's rights, labor unions, land reform and civil liberties. Manchester turns over the stone and gives us the full story of the struggle be-tween President Truman and Mac-Arthur, in which each covered himself with glory. The author seems to have read everybody who was con-cerned in anything and he quotes them with wit and acumen. While he was fond of pronouncing, MacArthur was not given to confiding and Manchester assem-bles all sorts of curious evidence to illustrate the inner man.

The reader learns what sort of toys he gave his only son; why he wore non-regulation pleats in the trousers of his uniform; what sort of attire he bought his Eurasian mistress when he was between marriages; how long he could go without urinating.Apart from the black comedy of war and government, Manchester introduces quite a bit

Manchester introduces quite a bit of the purely human comedy into "American Caesar." We find the general begged to father "great children" by Japanese mothers.

Like MacArthur himself, "American Caesar" is larger than life, running to a packed 793 pages. Yet it never seems to be too much. Manchester may cram his book, but he never jams it.

Mounties Fail to Get Man, Weiskopf Misses Tourney

By John S. Radosta

NEW YORK, Sept. 29 (NYT) — For three days, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police hunted for Tom Weiskopf in the Yukon, and Weiskopf would be playing in the World Series of Golf this weekend if the Mounties had been able to get their man.

Had he been found by the Mounties, Weiskopf, who has a puckish sense of humor, probably would have shown up at the series with a three-week growth of redd-ish beard — a sight golf fans have never been permitted to see be-cause of the tour's grooming code. On the other hand Deane Beman, commissioner of the PGA Tour, believes Weiskopf could not have played.

Time to Prepare

"It's one thing to be here physically," Beman said in a telephone interview from the Firestone Country Club in Akron, Ohio, site of the World Series. "But it's another thing for Tom to be prepared. He hasn't played golf in three or four weeks, and he would not have been

We have assumed all along Tom was not going to play. I think we acted preperly in making every effort to contact him before we officially announced the field for the World Series. There was no delay. The manhunt story follows an in-cident last year in which the PGA

Tour notified Hale Irwin that he had qualified for the World Series as the leader of the spring tour. Four weeks later the PGA Tour corrected the qualifier to Graham Marsh, not Irwin.'

The Weiskopf saga began last Sunday with the conclusion of a morning.

Then DeLeone called Canada. Weiskopf, his wife, Jeannie, and three friends had flown from Vancouver to White Horse for equip-ment, guides, horses and food. Then they trekked three days to establish a base camp in the moun-tains. Deleone phoned White Horse but the outlitter could not raise the party ou the radio telephone because there was no one in the base camp to answer - they were on the mountain stalking big-horns. That could take as much as a week away from the base camp.

Next, Del cone phoned the Roy-al Canadian Mounted Police. He knew the Mounties could get Weiskopf's location from the Canadisn game service. But first it took a lot of explaining about what the World Series was and who Tom Weiskopf was.

As the Mounties agreed to search, DeLeone phoned Weiskopf's father, baby-sitting at the Weiskopf home in Phoenix, Ariz, to be prepared to fly Weiskopt's cinbs and clothes to Wednesday night the Mounties phoned Deleone at his home in Columbus. Deleone and his wife were out shopping, and their 9-year-old son, Jeffrey, took the call. A Mountie sergeant told Jeffrey they knew where Weiskopf was but the only way to reach him and get him out was by helicopter from White Horse, which would cost $300 an bonr. Would DeLeone authorize that? Jeffrey declined to commit himself and said be would give his father the messar After he got home, DeLeone re-turned the call and told the Mounties to forget it — it was now too late for Weiskopf to make it to Akron. That was Wednesday night.

"Had 1 got enough notice Sunday, I would have had another day to search for Tom and I might have got him back here on time," DeLeone speculated. As of yesterday, there still was no radio contact with Weiskopf. He expected to leave Cana his own steam tomorrow.

And that was how Lon Hinkle made it into the World Series of Golf.

Ballesteros Leads Tourney

AKRON, Ohio, Sept. 29 (AP) ferred to go hunting big-horn sheep in the Canadian Rockies. Lakers' Superman Never Misses Game

By Ted Green

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 29 — He sport, too. The conditions were the is from Omaha, Neb., not the plan-same. It's silly." et Krypton. He changes clothes in locker rooms, not phone booths. He wears a purple or gold uniform with the number 24, not a red cape. Boone said it without rancor. He knows he wasn't a second-class citizen, and he proved it by averaging more points the last two years in the NBA (19.9) than he did in the ABA (18.4).

But it is a matter of pride. So much so that Boone said that it would take a serious injury to keep him out of the lineup now that he is so close to Kerr's 844. Boone has sh close to Kerr's 644. Boone has already proved that he can play when he is injured. He played with a separated right shoulder in 1969 and separated left shoulder in 1974.

"I wasn't even aware of the streak until 300 or 400 games,"

Boone said. "It wasn't until 500 or so that I checked into my past and realized I'd never missed a game."

Boone's lifetime record: three years at Kellom elementary school in Omaha, where he started the streak as a 9-year-old, 4-foot-4 guard in the fourth grade, two years at Omaha Tech junior high, four years as a smallish guard at Tech High, a year at Clarendon junior college in Iowa and three more as a 6-2 swingman at Idaho State, then the pros. Boone figures he has played in more than 1,100 straight games over the last 23

Outside of those shoulder separations (the result of collisions) and a split tendon on a knuckle from a fight during the 1973 ABA playoffs, Boone has avoided the pulls, sprains and strains that plague almost all basketball players at one time or another.

His training habits? Routine.

Boone said that be runs every day in the offseason ("The most important thing is to keep muscles stretched"), usually eats one nor-mal meal and tries to get a good night's sleep.

"The main thing," he said, "is that I really like to play, even if that sounds oversimplified. Eighty percent of the streak is luck." Maybe so, but Boone also is willing to play with bumps and bruises. and he has a particularly rugged

Deceptive Build
His is a distinctive build: short torso with almost incongruously long, thick arms and legs. Boone appears a compact 6-1 when he's actually 6-31/2. His 200 pounds are almost all muscle. He has hazel eyes, an infectious smile and a short, almost windblown Afro.

For sure he looks a lot different than Johnny (Red) Kerr, who played from 1954 to 1966 with Syracuse, Philadelphia and Baltimore. Kerr was a 6-9 white center with reddish hair and what athletes call a "soft" body. "There are endomorphs and ectomorphs," West said. "John was a fattymorph." But Kerr was also indestructible - and lucky. Now 46, he is a television broadcaster for the Chicago Bulls. Boone is a gifted, all-around guard who has the tools to play physically and the finesse to shoot 20-foot jumpers accurately. Playing 33 minutes a game in the ABA, he averaged 18.4 points, 5.3 rebounds, four assists and shot 47.2 percent from the floor and 80.5 percent from the foul line. With 12,180 points, he finished as the league's third all-time leading scorer behind Louis Dampier and Dan Issel, Boone and Jimmy Jones were the ABA's premier guards. In 35 minutes a game in the NBA, Boone's comparable numbers are 19.9, 3.6 rebounds, four assists, 46 percent and 84.9 percent. He is an explosive scorer, as Boston found out when he threw in 40 points one night last season. The newest key Laker, Boone figures to start in the backcourt alongside second-year man Norm Nixon. After the Lakers landed Boone and two second-round 1979 draft choices in a three-way deal last June 26 with Kansas City and Denver (which got guard Charlie Scott from Los Angeles) Boone signed a three-year contract. If his streak stays intact, he will hit 1,000 around Nov. 1, 1980, in the 10th game of the 1980-81 season.

At the Bachelors' Ball in 1953, attended by 84 of London's most eligible bachelors, 23-year-old Lord Carnegie declared; "I prefer cars to women. You don't get caught on the sequins.

• In 1959 the New Year was welcomed with a party given by the vivacious Mrs. Bunty Kinsman in her home in Milner Street, Chelsea. The theme of the party was the Fie de Boheme. Mrs. Kinsman was attired as a Salvador Dali painting and her Lloyds underwriter husband was dressed as the Eiffel Tower by Moonlight, Duncan Sandys, minister of defense, wore a painter's

• In 1963 the Kinsmans were at it again. with a medieval New Year's Eve party. Bunty Kinsman was dressed as a unicorn while her husband were a fur cover from a baby's pram explaining that he was "a middle-ag2d

The most mind-boggling party of all took place in 1941. In the middle of June reports came from Palm Beach that vivacious Elsa Maxwell has staged a "Bille" parto to raise money for British war chanties. Guesis were asked to come in dressing-gowns, siren suits or their oldest clothes and a large tent was scattered with fake deoris from which dummy figures were extracated and carried off on stretchers.

These events are from a book called "Gossip 1920-1970," a deadpen chroni-cle of the less significant events of half a century compiled by Old Harrovi-an Andrew Barrow, 33, who is not a gossip columnist and has never appeared in a column although he was listed in the Court Circular of the Times, which is rather beting.

i. book rims to have lake a lingle bill by storm descite to bigs price and care a lake a columnist tell-wine blanks. he was a page at generous excerpts. Ai-though concerned with English events, the hook will be published in 1979 in the United States and Mr. Barrow's agent has sold teatowel rights in the United States to the book's interesting endpapers, a sort of genealogical chart showing how everyone is related to everyone else. "There is such a continuum in London." Mr. Barrow says.

"It's utile-tattle, relaxing. Someone said this book makes no strain on the mind, which I think was not meant as a compliment but I took it as one. I like everyone in the book. One reviewer said I sneer. I certainly don't. Sometimes I was almost crying because of the way people survived: their durability is so to ching. "If you read it carefully, there are lots of patterns in it, there is a sort of rhythm, I'd like a reviewer to say it's an extremely weird hook - the selection of details, the rhythm, the leaving of people in the air."

Weird it is indeed, with such characters as Unity Mitford going to parties with her pet grass snake. Enid. slung around her neck. the Begum Aga Khan declaring during an interval of "Rigoletto" at Covent Garden in 1938 that Hitler was the most attractive man she had ever met, and the strapping Col. Barker who jurned out to he a woman. This is terrible." said the colonel's motherin-law. "My daughter nearly fainted when hem from 1920: On March 23, the vicar of All Saints. Cheltenham, was preaching by candlelight when the borrified faces of his congregation drew his attention to the faci that his surplice was on fire. A short while after the flames bad heen extinguished, it was discovered that the garment was again alight.

There are fleeung headliners such as Christine Keeler, and there is the durable Lady Dianz Cooper who is followed from her days as an actress in "The Miracle" through to an incident in 1968 when she receives apologies from the ceputy commis-stoner of the Metropolitan Police after a midnight raid by policemen seeking can-nabis in a hathor. There are so many entries for Cecil Beaton that the TLS reviewer suggested Mr. Barrow was obsessed by him.

"I interviewed Cecil Beaton by telephone once on what makes a good letter," Mr. Bar-row said, " 'The smallest details, the minutia are always interesting," he said."

'Completely Trivial'

Mr. Barrow agrees, "I am completely trivial, I have never been able to draw conclusions." He bas just written an article for Harpers and Queen on private dances and is writing one on nicknames. He has found two Buhbles and two people named Sunny so far. He wrote for The Observer for a while: A piece on butterfly farms and an investigative piece on candruff, "It took four or five days hard research. No one knows what causes it."

He says he is more interested in what a statesman had for lunch than in what he says. He is rather pleased to have learned from the Evening Standard's Diary page what Neville Chamberlain are on the aircraft that carried him to Berchtesgaden oo Sept. 15, 1938 (whisky and sandwiches going there, chicken and claret coming

Trivia in such quantity can be so hypootic as to seem to have meaning. "Someone sain that £10 [the price of the book] is too much to pay to learn that Lady Pamela Hicks won three bars of soap at a tombola," Mr. Bartow says, "I think it's marvelous. Three bars of soap: that's just the point."

One new knight was orchestral coo-ductor Charles Mackerras. Allan Clark, former groundskeeper at Avr race course, received his Brit-ish Empire Medal for services "to racing generally." William Stevens was honored not only for 19 years of selling tickets on the London subway system, but for tackling a man armed with a sawed-off shotgun who was trying to snatch a subway payroll.

The runoersup included a highjumper, a gymnast and a swimmer, but the Soviet Sportsman of the Year award went to someone who neither leaped oor dived. World chess champion Anatoly Karpov won the award in the annual poll of the Federation of Soviet Sports Journalists. Karpov, who defended his title in the Philippines against Soviet defector Viktor Korcimoi, also was personally honored by President Leonid Brezhnev with the Order of the Red Banner of Labor.
